PAPER TRUST AND TARIFF.

Discussion of the operations of the paper trust has served one admirable purpose in showing the absolute dependence of this combination on the tariff as a means of establishing and preserving its monopoly. When the newspaper publishers of the country asked congress to remove the tariff on paper and the raw material used in its manufacture, Chairman Payne of the ways and means committee declared the tariff had had nothing to do with the formation of the trust, and that no representative of the newspapers had protested against the increase of the tariff on paper when that was under consideration by the committee.

Replying to this, Congressman Gilbert Hitchcock of Omaha, himself a publisher, made a speech in the house which completely silenced the advocates of the trust. Citing the schedule of paper prices furnished the committee by the director of the census, Mr. Hitchcock showed their absolute falsity. Then he proceeded to quote from the records of the committee at the time it had an increase in the duty up for discussion. Those records show that John Norris, then publisher of the New York World, now manager of the Times, appeared before the men who now defend the trust and said:

"I do not appear before the committee to present any request, either for the newspaper or for the publishers generally, but I felt that it was due to this committee that some one should come here to advise it formally of the fact that the news paper manufacturers of the United States have perfected their arrangements for a combination by which every newspaper shall be at the mercy of a central selling agency and by which the price of news paper shall be raised, and by which these gentlemen shall derive an additional profit of from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000 out of their investment, and thereby tax knowledge and diminish the educational possibilities of the newspaper press."

So it seems Mr. Payne was in error when he said no one appeared to advise the committee on this subject. Just six months after Mr. Norris made his statement the paper trust was an accomplished fact, and today the newspaper publishers of the country are paying the millions of additional profits which are the direct result of the tariff. Ostensibly the duty was raised to enable the paper makers to exist; as a matter of fact it enabled them to float millions of watered securities, to buy out competitors, suppress such as would not sell, to reduce production and otherwise follow the common practice of all trusts once firmly established in a monopoly. It has been urged that the duty on paper is for protection to labor; the truth is the paper mills have fought every effort to advance wages. In 1890 the wages paid in the business amounted to 15 per cent of the value of the products; in 1900 the wages amounted to only 15 per cent, but the salaries paid to high-priced trust officials jumped from $1,770,000 to $4,500,000.

It is estimated that of $51,000,000 in securities issued by the trust at least $35,000,000 is water. In other words, the trust capitalized its tariff favor at just this amount, and now defies congress to touch it.

Whether the stand-patters in congress take any action or not, they have their choice of dilemmas: they can place themselves on record as favoring the interests of an illegal combination to the welfare of the reading public, or they can reduce the tariff and admit that in this instance, at least, the tariff has been responsible for as cold a game of robbery as ever masqueraded in the name of American industry.

A CRISIS IN LABOR LEGISLATION.

Probably the most important crisis in labor affairs in this country has arisen in Washington in connection with legislation desired by the affiliated unions whose representatives are now in conference at the capital. A number of questions are up, chief among which are the employers' liability bill as modified to meet the recent decision of the supreme court; the legislation desired by the unions to relieve them from the decision that boycotts are illegal; and the effort to secure a modification of the law which would prevent the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes except after hearing.

All three of these subjects are of vast importance to the labor unions, and they are making a desperate effort to secure action on them before the adjournment of congress. The president is on record as favoring the employers' liability bill, but he is understood to oppose any action which would look like legal sanction of the boycott, nor is he willing to restrict the power of injunction now possessed by the federal courts.

Whatever is done, the action of congress, either negative or positive, is sure to be a potent factor in the national campaign. In recent years the laboring men have gone to the polls with childlike confidence in the benevolence of the Republican party, only to find when congress met that the Republicans had mighty little use for them after the polls closed. The speaker of the house and every important committee in either house has systematically prevented the most important legislation asked for. In at least one committee hearing Mr. Littlefield of Maine was deliberately insulting to Mr. Gompers of the American Federation and the delegation accompanying him when they attempted to procure a committee report on a pending bill.

Now that the Republican elephant has stepped on the "full dinner pail" and made that a delicate subject for campaign reference, it is barely possible the labor interests will hesitate quite a while before they stamped to the polls for the party that has made them promises only to break them.

Pity the little sons and daughters of the rich. A dispatch says any number of million-dollar yachts have been placed on sale lately because of the hard times. Also it is reported—though such hardships seem incredible—that some of the poor rich are now using street cars instead of automobiles.

"Rejected Lover Coldly Blows Out His Brains," says a headline in a morning contemporary. On an occasion of that kind he felt that he could not tolerate the slightest familiarity. It was up to him to be very, very formal, and all that sort of thing, don't you know.

A speaker in the German reichstag the other day referred to the newspaper men as "swine." We wouldn't be in that speaker's place for a good deal. The newspaper men will never rest a moment until they have driven him from public life. At least, they wouldn't if they were Americans.

Madame Anna Gould, formerly the Countess de Castellane, announces that she has had enough of married life. We hardly think anybody will blame her, but it is too much to hope that her bitter experience will in any way depress the American market for foreign titles.

The first automobile ever seen in Jerusalem made its appearance there a week or so ago. Of course, it was driven by Charles J. Giddens. That man Giddens is first nearly everywhere when it comes to touring in an automobile.

Now comes a scientist who says that if we follow the old early to bed, early to rise proverb we will be "nervous, grouchy, subject to insomnia and neurasthenic." Now will you turn over and take another nap in the morning?

Why no, Best Beloved, we certainly do not blame the special auditors for prolonging their good thing. We do, however, blame the council for permitting that good thing to go on at the expense of the taxpayers.

New York Central railroad managers either do not believe there is such a thing as hard times or they are putting up a monumental bluff. They ordered 136 new locomotives and 24,000 tons of steel rails the other day.

It is about time for our Republican friends to start their quadrennial report that the dull season is caused by the fear that the Democratic presidential nominee may be elected.

But perhaps it was the hot stuff in the Booster that started the fire in the Elks' club building.

SOCIETY

The girls of the High school basket ball team have planned a day full of entertainment for the Ogden girls who will reach town on the noon train. The girls will be met at the train and taken to the Eaton gymnasium, where Miss Martha Johnson and Miss Elsie Ward, the two teachers, will entertain at a luncheon. An immense party at the Orpheum will follow, when red and black will dominate the house, and immediately after the party will enjoy a dinner at the Wilson. The game itself for which all this is preliminary, will take place at the Eaton gym at 8:30.

Mrs. Russell L. Tracy entertained a number of her friends yesterday afternoon at a bridge tea for Mrs. Ralph E. Hoag of Ogden. Sixty tables of bridge were played, and prizes were won by Mrs. W. W. Armstrong, Mrs. John W. Delano, Mrs. A. C. Ewing, Mrs. William C. Jennings, Mrs. Henry La Motte and the guest of honor, Mrs. Russell L. Tracy. The tables were brightly decorated with many spring flowers, and high tea was served at the small tables.

If the day continues as bright and fair as the past few days have been, there will be many things going out at the Country club today. The usual golfing crowd will be out in force, for the links are getting in better condition every day, and although the club is not yet opened formally, there will doubtless be a good number just to take in the country beauty around the place.

Mrs. Leslie L. Savage entertained a few friends yesterday afternoon at a bridge tea at the Goodwin home. Four tables of the game were played, and later tea was served. Mrs. O. W. Powers and Mrs. Benner X. Smith presiding, while Miss Rose McMillan, Miss Lorene Leary and Miss Eloise Sadler assisted.

Mrs. Mary J. Young is home after a visit of several months in San Francisco with her daughter, Mrs. Louis Schweitzer. She is at home now with Mrs. W. W. Mackintosh, another daughter.

Mrs. E. G. Belden will shortly be in her new home in O street, between First and Second avenues.

Mrs. Arthur Turnhouse of Denver, formerly Miss Eleanor White, is here visiting Mr. and Mrs. William Fark-winkle at the Keith apartments.

A cable has been received announcing the safe arrival in Hamburg of Mrs. Samuel Newhouse, who reached there early in the week.

The Saturday Night Bridge club will meet tonight with Dr. and Mrs. Hosmer, at their home on East First South street.

The P. E. O. society meets this afternoon with Miss Anna Decker at the Dart home on Second South street.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kearns, who are on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. will reach New York next Wednesday and will come directly home.

Miss Lena Hague is home from a visit of a few weeks at Riverside, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Walker will be home early next week.

Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Treganza are home after a tour of two months through Mexico.

Mrs. E. A. Wedgwood is back after a fortnight's visit with Mrs. Sam Schwab in Provo.
